 Barbican Estate City Of London
 The Barbican Estate is an upscale residential complex of around 2,000 flats, maisonettes, and houses within the City of London in Central London, in an area once devastated by World War II bombings and densely populated by financial institutions. Originally built as rental housing for middle and upper-middle class professionals, it remains to this day an upmarket residential estate.
 Barbican Estate - Wikipedia
 The Barbican Estate is a residential estate built during the 1960s and the 1970s in the City of London. During World War II, the City suffered serious damage and loss of life. The Cripplegate area was virtually demolished and by 1951 the resident population of the City stood at 5,324 of whom 48 lived in Cripplegate. Discussions began in 1952 about the future of the site, and the decision to ...

 Barbican Estate | modern architecture london
 The Barbican Estate was not built as a social housing project, but rather as a solution to repopulating the City of London after the war. The common misconception may originate from the fact that the architects had gained recognition earlier in 1951 for designing the nearby Golden Lane Estate, a major council housing project on the northern edge of the city.
