Predators of Kilimanjaro 01 Eurotica Young adults (and plenty of not-so-young adults) are addicted to the Internet. No surprise there. It's easy for parents and teachers, politicians and pundits to brush off Internet addiction as a harmless, inevitable consequence of the digital age, a small price to pay for carrying the information super-highway around in our pockets. But what if I told you that young adults (and plenty of not-so-young adults) are stuck in a feedback loop of digital sexual stimulation, addicted not just to the Internet but to pornography and social media? And what if I told you that the consequences of these addictions may be quite dire--ranging from depression, anxiety and ADHD to sexual dysfunction and violence? And what if I told you that, as far as social media companies and pornography producers and anyone who advertises on the Internet is concerned, the feedback loop is exactly where we belong? This book pulls readers out of the matrix. Part manifesto, part autobiography, part self-help roadmap, Breaking the Feedback Loop is a concise, essential guide to porn and social media addiction written for young adults and anyone else suffering at the hands of the Internet.

Emily's Secret Eros Comics

This is the second of three volumes of one of Gengoroh Tagame's biggest works: House of Brutes. Provocative to say the least, Japanese comic master Gengoroh Tagame's gay BDSM stories are legendary for both their virtuosic drawing and their unparalleled passion. Grade 5 FurPlanet Productions
A massive collection of never-before-collected pre-Comics Code horror comics of the 1950s. Of the myriad genres comic books ventured into during its golden age, none was as controversial as or came at a greater cost than horror; the public outrage it incited almost destroyed the entire industry. Yet before the watchdog groups and Congress could intercede, horror books were flying off the newsstands. During its peak period (1951-54) over fifty titles appeared each month. Apparently there was something perversely irresistible about these graphic excursions into our dark side, and Four Color Fear collects the finest of these into a single robust volume.

Second Coming Nbm Publishing Company

The purpose of this book is to complement my first book, "Engineer, Set Refueling Power." I tried to bring-in as many personal experiences as I can remember, in order to make sense of it all. There is some repetition from the first book. For example, in order to describe what it feels like during a Minimum Interval Takeoff (MITO), I have to repeat what a MITO is. Responsibility One thing becomes clear. We were all somewhat immature, as 2nd and 1st lieutenants; we were in our early twenties. We were well trained, and the Air Force expected a lot from us. The responsibilities heaped upon us young rated officers far exceeded that granted by private industry. Actually, it took many years to attain the same level of responsibility, if at all. Additionally, there was the real fear of screwing up, in the Air Force, and causing a life or death situation. In private industry, a screw-up may cause financial distress, but there is sufficient oversight to minimize the impact of a failure of a part causing death or injury. This could occur but the oversight by more experienced people, as well as the chief engineer's office, minimized the potential. Professional Training I graduated from Boston University in June 1960, with a B.S. in Aeronautical Engineering. Immediately thereafter, I received my commission as a 2nd lieutenant in the Air Force Reserve, via the AFROTC program. I was slated to become an Air Force navigator. My goal was to do one tour of active duty and leave the Air Force to work as an aeronautical engineer in the aerospace industry, before my professional training became stale. I wrote quite a bit about aircraft I was associated with, and, especially about aircraft engines and propellers. Pistons to Jets I found the 1960s were a transition period between piston engine-powered aircraft and jet engine-powered aircraft. The Pratt & Whitney R4360 Wasp Major was the most powerful piston engine to go into production. It powered the KC-97 tankers I was associated with on active duty, as well as the C-124 I crewed in the Air Force Reserve. Jet Engine Thrust Ratings of the Day Jet engines were coming on strong, but had quite a bit to go before completely supplanting the piston engine. The jets I refer to were the GE J47 turbojet on the six engine B-47 bomber. This jet engine produced 6000 pounds thrust statically, or 7200 pounds with water injection. The Pratt & Whitney J-57 powered the early B-52 bombers. This engine produced 10,000 pounds thrust statically, or 11,000 pounds with water injection. The jet engines of the day were noisy (no sound suppression), and had dirty exhaust. One disadvantage was the exhaust of the aircraft gave away the location of the aircraft, at altitude. This was caused by incomplete combustion in the engine combustors and early design fuel injectors. The available thrust was nothing to write home about. The jet powered aircraft required long runways for takeoff and landing. There were no thrust reversers. Also, the jet technology of the day precluded rapid spin-up of the engine, with a throttle burst. Rapid throttle movement could result in a compressor stall. For example, the B-47 utilized a 16 foot diameter approach chute. This enabled the engines to be at higher power than necessary for approach to landing. If a go-around was required, this chute could be dispensed with. Also, there was a 32 foot brake chute for the actual landing.
