 The Basil And Josephine Stories
 The Basil and Josephine Stories is a collection of two separate short stories collections (one about Basil Duke Lee, the other about Josephine Perry) by F. Scott Fitzgerald which initially ran serially in The Saturday Evening Post. Some of them were later collected in Taps at Reveille and posthumous short story collections. The title characters were intended by Fitzgerald to meet each other, but this never happened in his literature.
 The Basil and Josephine Stories - Wikipedia
 Then from 1930 to 1931, with Tender Is the Night still unfinished, Fitzgerald wrote five more stories (also published in the Post) that centered around Josephine Perry, Basil's female counterpart. Although Fitzgerald intended to combine the fourteen Basil Lee and Josephine Perry stories into a single work, he never succeeded in doing so in his lifetime.

 The Basil stories are based on FSF's own life and center on a boy/young man growing up, his ambitions and efforts to be both successful and well-liked. The Josephine stories are apparently based on a real-life young woman FSF was in love with in his youth. Basil is more interesting and Josephine, being a woman, is punished for her sins!
